

WE WANT TO HEAR FROM YOU

Aviation is an essential service and industry for the Australia economy, linking business and communities across a vast continent.

Despite this, workers at airports and in our skies across Australia have reported over the last two decades:

- ▶ Falling standards in job security
- ▶ The dangerous erosion of work life balance
- ▶ Declining safety

The TWU is campaigning for change.

Aviation is prone to external shocks like pandemics, natural disasters and international conflict.

But with no regulation, workers are left to rely on privatised airports and airlines to make decisions over your pay and conditions.

This will only accelerate with the introduction of new technologies throughout aviation.

It's created unsustainable boom or bust cycle with workers too often copping the brunt of the fight for profit and market share.

It is time for urgent reform.

Aviation workers are uniting across Australia to say enough is enough.

We need big changes to the aviation industry. It's time for the government to sit down with aviation workers and create a system that ensures airlines and airports lifts standards and safety and ensures we have a more sustainable aviation industry.

The first step is to make sure workers voices are front and centre of the campaign for change.
