

REX UPDATE

Following reports of a trading halt at Rex Airlines, the TWU is urgently contacting Rex to get clarity and commence discussions on workers being prioritised as this unfolds.

Media has reported Deloitte experts have been engaged to support Rex with this process. The TWU worked day in day out with Deloitte on the Virgin Australia administration and sale. Just as we helped revive Virgin in 2020, we're ready to work just as hard to keep Rex flying.

NEXT STEPS

- We're writing to Rex calling for an urgent meeting to discuss the impact on workers
- Workers must remain at the centre of consultation and must be prioritised
- We will keep members updated as more information comes to light

THE TWU PLAN FOR THE FUTURE OF AVIATION

- We know that with such a volatile aviation industry, smaller carriers like Rex struggle against Qantas and Virgin's market dominance
- Qantas in particular has led an industry race to the bottom on pay and conditions for workers, while paying executives millions
- That's why the TWU is calling for a Safe and Secure Skies Commission to protect all workers
- Today aviation delegates around the country met to discuss our plan and how to make aviation better
